RAOC	 During the Second World War the RAOC expanded rapidly from a few hundred officers and a few thousand men to 8,000 officers and 130,000 men in the space of four years. Units were created at divisional and corps level in response to the need for greater mobility than hitherto. After the fall of Rome on 4th June 1944, the Germans started to fall back along defensive lines going northwards. By September the 8th Army had broken through the Gothic Line in the Po Valley, but deteriorating winter weather slowed operations to a crawl. Pro-Ally Partisans provided support with sabotage and identifying air targets. A German counter-offensive was repulsed in the winter but it became a static front till 9th April 1945, when the Allies broke through.
